Piatto

by Sam Hecht & Kim Colin

FUCINA

Piatto is a family of tables made from solid steel plate; despite the material, however, the objects look light. The range includes small side tables, large coffee tables, and tall display tables. Piatto tables are perhaps familiar – the angles, joints, and shapes are all recognisable – but, by beguiling the eye, they appear lightweight. The collection includes tables with highly polished vertical planes that cut across horizontal surfaces, creating the optical illusion of having only two legs. Others, by means of small cantilevers, appear deliberately unbalanced. Fucina's artistic expertise in the construction and finishing of metal allowed for the realisation of this contrast of heavy steel with a lightness of appearance. Piatto's designs are entirely based upon the geometries of the square and the circle, expressing the elemental nature of the collection.
